In the barn of the Indian country side of Orissa, a calf was born. Being bred from a strong bull, the calf was bought by a rich merchant.

The gentle animal was well cared by the merchant. Orama was the pet name for the calf. He was fed with the best hay and was dotted over by the merchant.

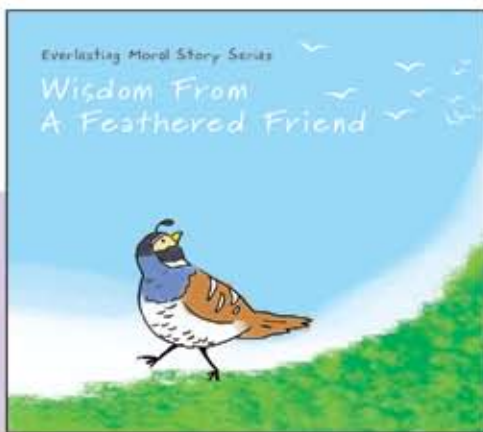

Soon Orama grew to be a big and strong bull. As a considerate animal, the bull thought to himself, "Over the years, I have benefited from the generosity of my master. He has fed me well in good and bad times. What can I do to repay his kindness?"
